

I am an Italian photographer examining contemporary culture through food and place.

I believe the food we create and enjoy both nourishes our bodies and informs our identity. My Sicilian grandmother revealed her story through Sunday suppers: the meals, the songs, the photographs she took for us to remember.

“Come Lava di Vulcano” is a shot series I shot in my hometown, Catania, inspired by Mt Etna the tallest active volcano in Europe.

Etna is the center of our life. It's impossible not to be inspired and mesmerised by its power.

We call it “il vulcano buono” the good volcano.

Fire, power, lava, and then new life again.

I am a Certified by Leica photographer. Clients include international publications, commercial clients, and some of the world's finest restaurants.
