

Alexandrine is a portrait series; it is a collection of moments spent with Alexandrine. She was my muse when we traveled together around California. We both felt like we were living in an indie movie; driving along the coast, sleeping in a car, cooking on the side of the road, feeling so free. I wanted to capture that, capture her natural beauty as well as her being intertwined with nature. Something she can look at in 30 years and imagine how the sun touched her skin and remembers how it was to be young. All photos were made with an analog camera in 2014.

I chose the free theme.
