

Footnotes and no footprints.

Just reflected light and cut-outs from the stories gathered on the way here.

Sometimes camera allows to come closer to the people we know. To see and discover the way they see the world around. I believe that people we meet give our vision new projecting points and directions. Creating new dimensions to the perspectives we already know.

There is a collection of shapes and light captured slowly in a very traditional manner. How environment can be seen, how it can look at its inhabitants? How still frames can capture something very dynamic. Our feelings, wonders and life. Here, now. At the time of unnecessary rushing photography flow, taking time and focusing on the details. It brings a bit of magic to the everyday journey.
