

Being able to capture the urban scenery of streets and neighbourhoods that I walk through every day has been a great lesson in the more you have seen the less you saw.

We get used to the same and out of nowhere there's a new house next door that you hadn't even realized was being built. It took some unexpected rides in distant cities that I have never been and a sincere opening for a new perspective. Those 10 images portray silence in very loud scenes in order to provoke the observation of those who see them for their own cities and inspiring places.

A little bit of myself:

"Iasmin Di Giorgio is a Brazilian design student who was born and raised in the city of Porto Alegre who introduced herself throughout her studies in photography, art, writing and music.

She goes by the artistic name of Iasmin Bossa"
