

Venice moments and mood

Venice is one of my favorite cities but also the biggest challenge for street photography. It is always full of tourists and it takes patience to capture its real face, its real people, the simple, mundane scenes, as you would do in other smaller cities.

I visited it twice, trying to get to places where tourists are not present or are quickly passing by, on their way to different sight-seeing or monuments, museums etc.

Didn't always manage to avoid them, but having weather as an ally, I tried to capture a simple, moody Venice, just as I pictured it without thousands of strangers roaming down its streets.

Rainy days, people on the water taxies going to work or to visit somebody, an old woman walking her dog, the staff from the restaurants getting ready or simple mundane scenes...
