

FREE THEME - CITY DREAMS

Patterns tell us stories, ones that emerge when different elements are combined. They form complex, layered and compelling visuals, constantly revealing new perspectives. They are neither chaos, nor perfect order, but something in between.

Urbanisation is quite similar in its nature. It is derived from different elements and generates stunning, elaborate sights. Growing, changing, spreading and becoming a pattern we all experience, live and absorb. At this point in history the urban narrative, standardized more than ever, overrides all other contextual differences. It is a display representative of our desires, problems, dreams and fears as a society.

Taking a step back and observing the world through this relation is exciting and revealing. My intention was to create a series of photographs that would graphically translate the connection.